24/06/2016 After the break in racing due to the 24 Hours of Le Mans, the IMSA SportsCar Championship picks up the pace again. One of the most storied sports car races in America will be contested on 3 July in Watkins Glen.

As the defending champions in the GTLM class, the most well-supported category with five manufacturers, the Porsche North America factory team campaigns two Porsche 911 RSR in the only six-hour race on the calendar of North America's most important sports car racing series. The most successful GT car of the 2015 season was based on the seventh generation of the iconic 911 sports car and last year celebrated a double victory at Watkins Glen. This race counts towards the North American Endurance Cup, a competition also encompassing Daytona, Sebring, and Petit Le Mans. Porsche currently leads this special long-distance category.
