

Porsche Penske Motorsport switches up its driver squad for the 2025 season

22/10/2024 Frenchman Julien Andlauer promoted to Porsche Motorsport's works driver lineup.

Porsche is tweaking its Porsche Penske Motorsport factory team driver lineup for the 2025 season. In contrast to the 2024 season, now just two drivers will regularly contest the FIA World Endurance Championship (WEC). Former Porsche Junior Julien Andlauer from France has been promoted to the German sports car manufacturer's factory – also known as "works" – driver squad for next year. Three-time Le Mans winner André Lotterer from Germany and four-time IMSA Champion Dane Cameron will leave the successful Porsche 963 program after their contracts expire at the end of the year. Frenchman Frédéric Makowiecki and Porsche Motorsport have agreed to conclude their collaboration after eleven years.

Atlanta, Georgia. For the 2025 FIA World Endurance Championship (WEC) season, Michael Christensen (Denmark) and the Frenchman Julien Andlauer will join forces as the regular crew in the No. 5 Porsche

963. The No. 6 sister car will be helmed by Laurens Vanthoor (Belgium) and Kévin Estre (France). The current plan is to call on a third driver for the 24 Hours of Le Mans. The No. 5 cockpit has been earmarked for Mathieu Jaminet (France) with Australian Matt Campbell driving the No. 6 car.

Jaminet and Campbell will also helm the No. 6 hybrid prototype in the IMSA WeatherTech SportsCar Championship (IMSA). The pair claimed the IMSA GTD Pro class championship in 2022 with another opportunity to repeat that success together in the coming season. The No. 7 car will be shared by defending IMSA champion Felipe Nasr (Brazil) and Englishman Nick Tandy, the 2015 Le Mans overall winner with Porsche. Estre and Vanthoor will support the IMSA crews at select Michelin Endurance Cup races.

“I’d like to thank Dane Cameron, André Lotterer and Frédéric Makowiecki for their incredible work over the past few years. All three have played a significant role in us being able to celebrate great successes with the Porsche 963 on both sides of the Atlantic – in just the second year of competition,” states Thomas Laudenbach, Vice President Porsche Motorsport. “We compete in 2025 with a changed lineup. Our squad continues to be among the top echelons of endurance racing internationally. Plus, we’re remaining dedicated to our very successful initiative by supporting another former Porsche Junior to climb to the top of the career ladder. Over the past few seasons, Julien Andlauer has impressed us at the wheel of every Porsche racing car. He absolutely deserves this promotion into the works driver squad.”

“We put much thought into our squad for next season’s international racing campaign. With the new lineup, I believe we’ve put together a winning combination for 2025," explains Urs Kuratle, Director Factory Motorsport LMDh. “We’ll have two very experienced drivers in both series, plus two drivers in sister cars, all of whom have come up through the ranks of Porsche’s junior program and completely won us over as talented youngsters. I’d also like to thank Dane Cameron, André Lotterer and Frédéric Makowiecki. All three have contributed to getting the Porsche Penske Motorsport campaign to where it now stands in global endurance racing: at the top.”

“Porsche Penske Motorsport has enjoyed successful campaigns in both the IMSA and WEC seasons in 2024. We won the 24 Hours of Daytona, scooped the title pool in the IMSA championship and now head to Bahrain leading the WEC drivers’ and manufacturers’ standings,” says Jonathan Diuguid. The Managing Director Porsche Penske Motorsport adds: “Our success is also largely due to the strong performances of our driver pairings. For 2024, we relied on consistency and continuity and made only a few targeted tweaks to the squad. This decision proved to be right. Spurred by these successes, we’ll take a similar approach for 2025. The IMSA and WEC race calendars allow us to mobilize the driver pairings even more often. The door has opened for involvement in both series.”

Julien Andlauer: Successful thanks to early support in the junior programme

With the signing of Julien Andlauer in the 2025 factory driver lineup, Porsche holds strong to its successful path: finding exceptionally talented youngsters early and supporting them in the junior program, which includes the Porsche Mobil 1 Supercup. The subsequent integration into top-tier customer racing projects then assists the company's talented youngsters advance into the top categories of endurance racing. After Christensen, Jaminet and Campbell, the 25-year-old Frenchman will be the fourth former Porsche Junior to compete for the Porsche Penske Motorsport factory team next year.

Andlauer gained his first taste of motor racing in karting and the French Formula 4. He then switched to the Porsche Carrera Cup France, which he won in 2017. At Porsche's annual selection process, the young driver beat other top-class competitors to become a Porsche Junior for the 2018 season. That year, Andlauer contested the Porsche Mobil 1 Supercup, where he achieved fourth place with two victories, and debuted at the 24 Hours of Le Mans. Driving a Porsche 911 RSR for Dempsey-Proton Racing, he promptly won his class. In the following years, the Frenchman turned heads at his outings for customer teams at the wheel of various Porsche GT vehicles and gained his first experience in Le Mans prototypes. This year, Andlauer advanced to the Hypercar class of the FIA WEC. In Proton Competition's Porsche 963, the 25-year-old made a lasting impression in Spa-Francorchamps with blistering lap times and spirited overtaking maneuvers.

Three-time Le Mans outright winnerAndré Lotterer first climbed into the cockpit of the Porsche 919 Hybrid in 2017, contesting the former LMP1 class of the FIA WEC. He then switched to Formula E – with success. In the debut year of the TAG Heuer Porsche Formula E works team, he finished second in the very first race of the 2019/2020 season. Lotterer joined the Porsche Penske Motorsport squad in 2023. In March this year, the ex-Formula 1 driver contributed to the Porsche 963's maiden victory in the World Endurance Championship at the race in Qatar.

Dane Cameron joined Porsche in 2022 as an experienced prototype driver in the IMSA series. The American driver played an integral role in the rapid and consistent development of the Porsche 963. After his appearances in the FIA WEC in the 2023 season, Cameron returned to the North American endurance racing scene. This yielded success. The California native now living in Huntersville, North Carolina, cemented his collaboration with Porsche Penske Motorsport in October this year by winning the IMSA GTP championship.

Frédéric Makowiecki has raced for Porsche since 2014. The seasoned pro from France secured four class victories at the helm of the Porsche 911 RSR in the FIA WEC – including a triumph at the 2022 Le Mans 24 Hours in the fiercely competitive GTE Pro class. In 2018, he was one of the four drivers in Manthey Racing's 911 GT3 R that won the Nürburgring 24 Hours. After two years with the 963-hybrid prototype in the World Endurance Championship, Porsche Motorsport and Makowiecki have mutually agreed to part ways at the end of this season.
